In trauma, primal instincts to survive collide with powerful archetypal experiences, setting off seemingly endless cycles of pain. We suffer greatly in our reactive responses to trauma, making it difficult to realize that our animal bodies hold invaluable capacities for mending our soul's wounds and fractures. As Jung suggested, alchemy beautifully illustrates the intricate processes of psychic transformation, and it emphasizes the integration of the physical matter of our bodies to bring wholeness. A series of compelling alchemical images will be explored, helpfully illuminating the psychological transformations in the nervous system, the heart work of relational trauma, and the higher aspects of thought and spiritual practice in trauma resolution.

Lindsey Geiger, LMFT, is a Jungian Analyst in Evergreen, Colorado. She is a member of the C.G. Jung Institute of Colorado. She received her MA in Counseling Psychology from Pacifica Graduate Institute and her work in private practice focuses on treatment of anxiety and trauma, religious and spiritual wounding and resolution, and spiritual recovery.
